

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

5 A device for recognizing and assigning priorities to data packets for telecommunications networks, comprising switching means which are adapted to divide data packets that arrive from an operator network connected thereto and to route them according to packet type, the switching means being connected to voice data processing means and to a plurality of outputs which allow to connect apparatuses for processing the data.